Eight Hundred Automobiles Parked In Center of Race Track--Estimated That No Less Than 20,000 Paid Admission--Prizes Awarded For Exhibitions.

Coshocton county's sixty-fourth annual fair will close today a decided success both from quanity and quality of exhibits and in attendance. With the promise of fair weather though slightly colder or today, it is practically certain that the day's attendance will equal that of other years.

Secretary W. B. Miller's face was radiant last night for there were approximately 20,000 paid admissions at the gate of the county fair Thursday. As a large number of fair members, free list attendants and children were upon the grounds, it is estimated that almost 25,000 persons attended the big fair yesterday. The midway was a seething mass of elbowing humanity from early morning until late in the afternoon. From all the surrounding county and nearby towns the crowds poured in, hundreds arriving before seven o'clock.

Winners Named

Announcement was made Thursday by Secretary Miller of the winners of the stockjudging contest. The contest was unusually close. Just 22 points separated the winners of first and fifth places and but a single point lay between the holders of third, fourth and fifth places respectively. The names of the winners and their scores are as follows:

Harold M. Orr, Bethlehem twp. 457.

Clarence Wolfe, Keene twp. 441

Cecil Buxton, Virginia twp. 437

Clyde OLager, White Eyes twp. 436.

Charles F. Sells, Tuscarawas twp. 435.

Orr will be given his choice of a registered calf, hog, or sheep. Wolfe will be given his choice of the other two animals while Buxton will receive the third. In addition the three will each receive a free trip with all expenses to the Farmers' week feature of the Ohio State University during the coming winter.

Granges Interested

Quite a bit of interest and rivalry was manifested in the grange exhibits and an unusually creditable showing was made by all the granges competing. Their exhibits included specimens of nearly all farm products, culinary skill and needle handiwork. Franklin grange carried off the high honors with Oak Hill grange as a close second. Fresno grange received the third award.

Perhaps one of the most noteworthy exhibits in needlework among the hundreds of articles displayed in that department, was an immense butterfly worked in silk by Prof. J. E. Thomason. The work is a piece of art and is marvelously perfect in its faithfulness in coloring and porportionate outlines. It is said that 150 shades of silk were used in the making.

One of the finest displays ever made by local merchants was a part of the local fair this year. Large exhibits were made by the Gray hardware store which secured first awards for their exhibit of cookstoves and grates and the Central Hardware store which secured first on display of cooking utensils and heating stoves.

Moore and Meade had no competion in their display of jewelry and so received first. The Central Market and Grocery company also received firsts for their display of groceries. There were no competitors.

It was said last night by Secretary Miller that local exhibitors had made an usually good showing against outside competitors this year. The list of the judges' decisions has not yet been made out and it is impossible to secure complete lists of awards until this is done. It was known Thursday in the poultry department that Frank Retzler received first on display of [illegible] and Frank Ricketts second. Lancelot Hall received first on Americans and Retzler second. Judges Thursday night were unable to give accurate figures regarding the number of awards made to the different exhibitors. It was said by B. O. Stingle, superintendent of the department, that Retzler, Ricketts, and W. J. Slengster, local exhibitors, would carry off the lion's share of the awards.

First award for agricultural display went to Mr. Lawrence, proprietor of the Valley View farm. Parker Kimberly, of Coshocton, received second, while S. R. McCormick, of [illegible], received third. The latter won the sweepstakes on potato display with Mr. Lawrence second. Mr. McCormick also won the [illegible] on

Thieves Smash Toll Coin Box At Newcomerstown And Secure Large Sum

Some time Wednesday night, thieves entered the Bell telephone office at Newcomerstown and smashed open the coin box in the toll booth. A large sum of money was secured by the thieves who left no clue to their identity.

The robbery was first discovered by Miss Blanch Bassett, an operator, who upon her arrival at the office found the transom door lying upon the floor on the outside of the room. Entering the room she found the blinds had all been drawn, one having been torn from its fastenings. Within the toll-booth lay the fragments of the coin box which had been literally smashed to bits.

Manager Dwight Dawson, of Uhrichsville, was notified at once and the police called in to aid in apprehending the thieves. [illegible] toll-tickets are sent to Pittsburg the Newcomerstown operators have no means of knowing just how much was in the box.

Mrs. Edith Malarkey Has Chest Crushed—Driver Of Machine Is Injured

In an attempt to make the turn off South Lawn avenue upon Bank street while traveling at a high speed about two o'clock Thursday afternoon, an auto driven by J. Gallup, of Cambridge, with Mrs. Edith Malarkey, of this city, and Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Gallup, of Cambridge, as passengers, went over an embankment painfully injuring Mrs. Forrest Gallup and the driver. Mrs. Malarkey and Mrs. Gallup are the daughters of Mrs. Adithea McDowell, of East Chestnut street.

It was said last night that the driver of the machine was under the influence of liquor and was driving at an excessive speed. He attempted to turn off South Lawn but the momentum of the car caused it to skid and turn upon its side throwing the four occupants out. The car landed between Bank street and the cemetery road badly damaged.

Chest Is Crushed

Examination by Dr. McClain revealed the fact that Mrs. Gallup had been severely crushed about the chest but it was not thought that internal injuries had been sustained. She was removed to the home of her mother, Mrs. Adithea McDowell, of East Chestnut street, where at a late hour last night she was said to be resting easily. The driver of the car refused to allow an examination to be made but it is thought that he sustained a fracture of one or more ribs. He returned to Cambridge last night. Beyond severe bruises the other occupants of the car were uninjured.

Rear Coach Of Train Slides Over Embankment Near Branstool Bridge

The last coach on the Mansfield excursion train which left here at 5:30 o'clock Thursday evening, was derailed by a broken rail between Lomerene and Walhonding and the rear end of the car plunged over an embankment. A man whose name was not learned but whose home was said to be in Mansfield, sustained a broken limb, another was severely cut about the head by pieces of flying glass and the remainder of the two score passengers within the car received minor cuts and bruises.

Communication with Mansfield in an attempt to learn the names of the injured parties was fruitless. Dr. Cureton, of Walhonding the physician summoned, accompanied the victim who sustained a broken limb, to Mansfield.

Near Bridge

The accident occurred about seven o'clock just as the car was about to cross the bridge near the George Branstool farm. When about fifty yards from the bridge the rear coach left the rails and began to bump along on the ties. After proceeding in this manner for about one hundred feet, the car broke loose from the car in front tearing out a part of the rear platform of the latter coach.

The rear end of the last coach then swung around and slid over a ten foot embankment leaving the car resting at an angle of about sixty degrees. Fortunately it remained upright. Pieces of glass from the broken windows were sent flying in all directions and many sustained minor cuts from this source. Others were painfully bruised by being dashed against the seats and sides of the car when it left the track and slid over the embankment.

Driver Reported Burned to Death

Carelessness Said To Be Responsible For Conflagration Which Threatened To Destroy Entire Village of Walhonding--Damage Estimated at $5,000.

A carelessly thrown cigaret stub is thought to have been responsible for a conflagration which completely destroyed the William Johnson livery barn and residence, the Richard Hagans residence and several smaller out buildings and damaged other property at Walhoning Thursday night at eight o'clock.

Damage estimated at $5,000 was done before two hundred men who worked for almost three hours, had the blaze under control.

A man employed as driver for a Utica livery stable is said to have been burned alive while sleeping in the hay mow of the barn. While this report was current in Walhonding following the fire, its truth was not definitely established. It is said that the man had brought a traveling man from Utica to Walhonding. His fare, it is reported, took a train at Walhonding and the driver planned to return to Utica this morning. One of his horses is said to have been burned.

The fire was discovered shortly after eight o'clock and an effort was made by a hastily formed bucket brigade to check the spread of the blaze. A large crowd from the surrounding country drawn by the wreck of the Mansfield excursion train, was still in the village when the fire broke out and joined the volunteers.

It is thought that all of the horses but two were rescued from the burning barn but several buggies, several sets of harness, robes and other property was consumed with the barn.

SPREADS RAPIDLY

The blaze communicated to the Johnson home which is directly east of the barn and a few minutes later the dwelling owned by C. B. Ogle, and occupied by Richard Hagans, just west of the barn, was a mass of flames. A barn at the rear of the Ogle residence was also ablaze and the brilliant glow in the sky could be seen at Warsaw and other points within a radius of about ten miles.

Save Brick Building

Realizing that the blazing structures could not be saved, the entire brigade concentrated in an effort to prevent a further spread of the fire by drenching the bank building, which is scarcely six feet east of the Johnson dwelling, with water. The bank building is of brick one room being occupied by a pool room and the other by an ice cream parlor. Strips of sheet iron were placed against the side wall of the pool room next to the blazing house and every pump in the village was kept busy. The top of the building was kept flooded with water and other than the damage to the brick by the intense heat and the burning of the window casings, no loss was sustained.

It is said that $1500 is a conservative estimate of the loss by the destruction of the livery stable. An equal loss was sustained by the destruction of the Johnson dwelling. No estimate on other damage could be had by The Tribune last night.

Several times before the blaze was completely extinguished, a barn belonging to S. C. Priest was ablaze.

Had it not been for the fact that the bank building is on higher ground than the Johnson residence and acted as a fire wall, other structures would have been destroyed.

It was first feared that practically the entire village would be destroyed and calls for assistance were sent to New Castle and other nearby villages.

THE CHICAGO STOCK COMPANY PRESENTS GREAT PLAY TONIGHT

Seats Selling Rapidly For All Nights

Manager Rosskam of the Chicago Stock Company takes great pride in being able to offer his Coshocton patrons, the wonderful play his excellent company will offer tonight, namely "The Test" a gripping dramatic production that Miss Blanche Walsh starred in for three years and afterwards took the sensational third act of the play into the leading vaudeville houses as a feature attraction.

In this absolutely unique drama the question is asked can a man be forgiven for his sins, while the woman is forced to go on hiding her face in shame. The serious moments are strong but delightful comedy scenes brush away the tears and provoke heart laughter.

The advance sale for this evening is large but in order to accommodate those who are unable to secure their seats early, a number of choice seats will be placed on sale tonight at seven-thirty.

"Collector" Draws Fine

Jesse Stiner, of Pleasant Valley, William Tooey, William Riley and Jesse Smith were each fined $1 and costs on intoxication charges Wednesday morning when they faced the mayor in police court. Stiner declared that he had only imbibed a single glass of beer. His loud talking when insisting on the payment of an old account was responsible for his arrest, he said.

PRINCE ALBERT

is such good tobacco you feel like you could just eat the smoke!

Yes, sir, P. A. puts a razor edge on your smoke-appetite-division that's nobby enough to be photographed! No other pipe and cigarette tobacco can be like Prince Albert, because no other tobacco can be made like Prince Albert. The patented process fixes that—and removes the tongue-bite and throat parch! Let that digest!

The toppy red bag, 5c

And that line of conversation is 24 kt., whether you play P. A. in your old jimmy pipe or roll it into a makin's cigarette. For you can put your little old blue-pencil O. K. right here that Prince Albert is a regular double-header for a single admission—as joy'us to your tongue and taste one way as the other!

Will the "rollers" kindly step forward for a spell and get some of this listen into their systems? Because Prince Albert certain and sure jams more joy into a makin's paper than ever before was figured up on two hands!

In the plain language of the hills, you can't any more resist such makin's tobacco than a bullfrog can pass up a piece of red flannel! Because P. A. hands to you everything any cigarette roller ever dreamed-out—rare flavor, and aroma, and mildness, and body; absolutely the best bet—the best smoke you or any other man ever did roll and put the fire to! Men, we tell you to wise up.

P. A. is crimp cut and stays put—which means rolling P. A. is as easy as falling off a log. And it's good to remember P. A. is put up in the toppy red bag especially for you "rollers." Sells for the price of a jitney ride. 5c

Now, will the "pipers" kindly open both ears?

Here's tobacco that has made it possible for three men to smoke pipes where one smoked before!

Any way you hook it up, Prince Albert is tobacco insurance! Yes, sir, it guarantees your future as well as your present smokings! And just makes your tongue so jimmy pipe joy'us that your smoke appetite grows whopping big. You men who "dassn't," we say you go to P. A., natural-like! Because there isn't a bite in a barrel of this national joy smoke.

Unlimber your old jimmy pipe! Dig it out of the dark corner, jam it brimful of P. A. And make fire with a match! Me-o-my!

You get acquainted with Prince Albert in the toppy red bag, 5c; or tidy red tin, 10c, but for the double-back-action-joy, you buy a crystal-glass pound humidor. And then you're set! You see, it has the sponge-moistener top and keeps P. A. at the highest top-notch point of perfection. Prince Albert is also sold in pound and half-pound tin humidors.

Is Stricken Third Time

Mrs. W. H. McNeal, of Blissfield, suffered another slight stroke of paralysis Wednesday night. Thursday her condition, though slightly improved, was said to be quite serious. This is the third time that she has been stricken.

She is being attended by Dr. Cureton, of Walhonding.

Art and Appetite.

"Your singing tonight was divine!" exclaimed an enthusiastic admirer to the prima donna. "I could see by the expression on your face and the light in your eyes that you were inspired."

"I fear you are mistaken," said the prima donna, with her most engaging smile. "Our art is so exacting that we don't dare to eat a hearty meal before singing. I was ravenously hungry, and I was thinking of all the good things I would order when the concert was ended."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

WOMEN WHO ARE ALWAYS TIRED

May Find Help in This Letter.

Swan Creek, Mich.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When through neglect or overwork I get run down and my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a great blessing to women, and I cannot speak too highly of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, R.F.D., No. 1, Swan Creek, Michigan.

Another Sufferer Relieved.

Hebron, Me.—"Before taking your remedies I was all run down, discouraged and had female weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used the Sanative Wash, and find today that I am an entirely new woman, ready and willing to do my housework now, where before taking your medicine it was a dread. I try to impress upon the minds of all ailing women I meet the benefits they can derive from your medicines."—Mrs. CHARLES ROWE, Kennebago, Maine.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

COFFEE A NARCOTIC AND DOPE WITH OPIUM

Well known medical writer declares coffee, like opium, holds victims in pitiless grasp

"I would like to make everyone thoroughly understand that coffee is a narcotic—a very strong narcotic, too," says Dr. C. S. Carr in a communication to the Ohio State Journal.

"There is no drug in the pharmacopeia that has a more powerful effect upon the brain centres than coffee. Coffee is a dope and narcotic almost equal to opium. To be sure, it does not produce at once the mental disaster that opium does. Slowly but surely coffee gets control of its victim and holds him in its grasp, a pitiful helpless victim."

NOTE—The food-drink, Instant Postum, while much resembling the higher grades of Java coffee in flavor and appearance, is absolutely free from the coffee drugs, caffeine and tannin, or any other harmful ingredient. Pure, wholesome, harmless, convenient, economical, this delicious hot beverage is rapidly taking the place of coffee in homes where health is a prime desideratum.

OHIO MAN SAYS HE RECOVERED FROM HASTY CONSUMPTION

JOHN A. THIRTYACRE.

John A. Thirtyacre, 513 Thomas Ave., Columbus, O., makes a statement that Nature's Creation cured him of hasty consumption. He says that "I feel it my duty to tell what the medicine did for me. No matter how bad your case may be and no matter what people say, don't give up. Try Nature's Creation."

Read Mr. Thirtyacre's statement about his recovery:

"In April, 1914, I swallowed a large tack and it lodged in my lung, and in trying to cough it up the lung was torn. This affected the lung and developed into a case of hasty consumption. Four doctors treated me, but my condition became worse until I was flat on my back. On September 10th, 1914, I began taking Nature's Creation. I was having night sweats continually, [illegible] my chest and both lungs very sore, and was told by several physicians that I had tuberculosis and could not live over thirty days.

"After taking most of the first bottle of Nature's Creation, a wonderful improvement was noticeable and I continued to improve until I was entirely cured. When I began taking the medicine I weighed only 107 pounds. I now weigh 150 pounds and have never had a return of the old trouble."

In our booklet, [illegible], you will find stories from other [illegible] people of remarkable recoveries from tuberculosis and the conditions leading to it, such as asthma, bronchitis, catarrh, [illegible] blood and rundown system. MY LADY DAFFODIL

How She Came to Wear a Yellow Gown That Night.

By VIRGINIA BLAIR.

In Miss Priscilla's garden there was a clump of daffodils.

"I am going to pick all of them," said Judy Perkins, who was Miss Priscilla's niece.

"Please don't, Judy," said Miss Priscilla faintly.

"Why not?"

"Because," was Miss Priscilla's woman's reason.

Judy looked at her. "Tell me," she urged. "You are blushing, and you can't have any secrets from me, Aunt Pris."

Miss Priscilla beamed. It was such a new delight to be bossed by this beautiful being, who had come all the way from Europe to the little country village to see for the first time her father's sister.

"Tell me," Judy repeated, and drew the little lady down beside her on the garden bench.

Judy listened intently while Miss Priscilla stammered out her little romance. "So you and he always sat on this bench by the daffodil bed, and you wore a little yellow dimity gown, and he called you 'My Lady Daffodil'?"

"Yes." Miss Priscilla's voice was dreamy. "And he used to quote some verses that ended:

"And then my heart with pleasure fills
And dances with the daffodils."

"Why don't you marry him?" Judy murmured.

"There was a misunderstanding," Miss Priscilla said, "and he went away, and I haven't heard from him since, and that was twenty years ago."

Judy eyed the shabby black figure in a big hug. "Dear Aunt Pris," she said, "and you have been alone and lonely all these years, while I have been having a good time."

"You couldn't know," Miss Priscilla said, "but after father and mother died, I invested all of my money in a mining scheme that failed."

"No; we didn't know," Judy said, "and you have scrimped and saved and gone without pretty things while I have simply squandered lots of money on gowns."

"The one you have on is a beauty," Miss Priscilla said. "You look like a rose."

Judy laughed. "The rose and the daffodil," she said. "We belong in your garden, Aunt Pris."

"Miss Priscilla," said some one from the other side of the fence, "may I have a rose from your garden?"

"I told you last night you couldn't, Bobbie," Judy retorted.

"Don't quarrel," Miss Priscilla expostulated. "Come up presently and have lunch with me."

As she left them Judy stood looking after the slender, old fashioned figure. "Did she ever tell you about the daffodils, Bobbie?"

"No."

"He was her lover, and he went away—and his name is Constantius Mercer."

"Do you know," Bobbie said, "there's a man at the hotel named Mercer—C. Mercer?"

Judy grasped his hands across the fence. "Bobbie, boy," she said, "suppose it should be the same one—and suppose he's coming back here to look up Aunt Pris."

"She must have changed awfully in that time," Bobbie said. "She—she isn't very pretty now, you know, Judy."

"She's beautiful," Judy said defiantly. "Her hair is lovely, and her eyes—"

"Constantius is probably old and bald and ugly, but of course that doesn't count. Well, one doesn't exactly look for beauty in a man."

"If one did one might be disappointed," Judy murmured pointedly. Then she went on: "If it is Constantius he'll probably be over this evening, Bobbie."

"Why?"

"Because she said he always came at twilight, and—and lovers don't forget such things, Bobbie."

"Don't they?" Bobbie demanded with some interest. "Will you remember that I always came at high noon in time for lunch, Judy?"

"Aunt Pris," Judy said a little later when they were at lunch, "I'm going to get the dinner tonight, and I want it late. Bobbie's coming, and I'm going to put on style."

Bobbie looked up in amazement, but Judy's eyes warned him. "You are to come at 7:30," she said. "I want to show you what a fine cook I am."

"Please," Judy began, "let me get the dinner and—and I want to dress you up and have you play lady for once in your life. You are going to wear a pretty gown, tonight," Judy said decidedly. "Come on upstairs and choose one, Aunt Pris."

Once in Judy's room that enthusiastic maiden dumped on the bed a dozen gowns before she found the one she sought.

"There," she said at last, as she took down a fluttering, fluffy thing of pale yellow chiffon. "Put that on and see how you look, Aunt Pris."

"Oh, my dear," Miss Priscilla protested. But Judy commanded, and soon Miss Priscilla was encased in the wonderful gown.

"But you can't wrong," Judy decided and pulled out hairpins and curled and patted and puffed the shining brown locks into a wonderful coiffure—topped with a gold comb.

"Why, it's just the way I used to wear it," Miss Priscilla said.

"And now you are to take a book and go down to the garden seat and stay there until I call you to dinner."

A half hour later Bobbie appeared at the kitchen door.

"Judy," he said in an awed voice, "I didn't know clothes could make such a difference."

"What?" asked Judy, abstracted. She was deep in the mysteries of mayonnaise.

"Miss Priscilla is down by the daffodil bed in a yellow gown, and she looks like a girl with her hair done that way. And Constantius is headed for the garden. He is a good looking old duffer, Judy."

"I hope he has piles of money," Judy said.

"I'll run back and dress," Bobbie said. "But I wish you'd let me get the Lady of the Roses if he gets My Lady Daffodil, Judy."

"Go away," said Judy, but her eyes were kind.

There were golden shadows across the grass as Bobbie went toward the gate, and Miss Priscilla's gown made a spot of gold in the dusky corner where the daffodils grew. And at the gate Bobbie met Constantius, but the man scarcely bowed. His eyes were on that golden spot in the dusky corner.

Miss Priscilla turned, started up, and her eyes were like stars.

"My Lady Daffodil," he said softly.

"Conrad"—she gasped, and then Bobbie fled.

And when he crept back later he found shades on the silver candlesticks.

He produced a great bunch of daffodils, and Judy put them in a silver bowl in the center of the table.

"Judy, this is my old friend Constantius Mercer," said a happy voice.

Constantius held Judy's hand and looked down at her. "Priscilla and I have been wondering how you happened to make her wear that yellow gown today."

"A little bird told me you were at the hotel."

"A little bird?"

"Bobolink," said Bobbie from the other side of the table.

"Oh," and Constantius grasped the other's hand. "I told you I knew Miss Perkins?"

"Yes," said Bobbie, "and I told Judy, and thereby hangs the tale."

But Constantius was not listening—hand in hand with Miss Priscilla he was looking at the daffodils that nodded under the golden light.

And Judy, watching the old lovers, turned her eyes presently on her young lover and then her hand went out to him, and behind the backs of the others he bent and kissed her.

A Chameleon's Bite.

The bite even of the largest chameleon does not fetch blood, though the teeth leave indentations. I often, says a naturalist, provoke them to bite me in order to observe their habits, and only once, when one caught me between the fingers where the skin is tender, was I really hurt. On this occasion the animal held on so persistently and firmly that I could not for some time free my finger. At last I was obliged to call some one to get it off by forcibly opening its mouth. Even then it did not pierce the skin. But the are too fine and regular, but the dotted triangular impression of the little teeth was very red and distinct for some minutes.

Rid Stomach of Gases, Sourness, And Indigestion

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an uncertain one—or a harmful one—your stomach is too valuable; you mustn't injure it with drastic drugs.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmlessness; its certain unfailing action in regulating sick, sour, gassy stomachs. Its millions of cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and other stomach trouble has made it famous the world over.

Keep this perfect stomach doctor in your home—keep it handy—get a large fifty-cent case from any drug store and then if anyone should eat something which doesn't agree with them; if what they eat lays like lead, ferments and sours and forms gas; causes headache, dizziness and nausea; eructations of acid and undigested food—remember as soon as Pape's Diapepsin comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. Its promptness, certainty and ease in overcoming the worst stomach disorders is a revelation to those who try it.

GERMANY'S DISAVOWAL

The German note disavowing the sinking of the Arabic and offering full reparation for the loss of American lives means more than a brilliant diplomatic victory for President Wilson.

It is a sign and a promise that the German Government is restored to sanity. If that be the fact, there will be no further serious complications between the United States and Germany, and all the differences that now exist can be settled honorably and peacefully.

The Arabic note complies with every demand that the President made, and it complies generously and ungrudgingly.

The Imperial Government reaffirms the pledge made by Count von Bernstorff to Secretary Lansing in writing Sept. 1 that "liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of non-combatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance." In spite of the official reports of the Commander and crew of the German submarine which sank the Arabic, the Imperial Government accepts the affidavits of the British officers that no attempt was made to ram the submarine. On the basis of the evidence, the action of the submarine Commander is formally disavowed and his name is made public in order that his responsibility may be a matter of record. The Imperial Government further expresses its "deep regret" and authorizes its Ambassador to negotiate in respect to the amount of indemnity.

No Government could well go further in acknowledging a wrong committed against a friendly nation and in expressing its wish to make full atonement than Germany has done in this case. And the spirit is no less remarkable than the action. The note that Count von Bernstorff presented to the State Department yesterday is the first wholly satisfactory proof we have had that Germany sincerely desired to maintain the ancient friendship with the United States. If that is the true purpose of the Imperial Government, there are no obstacles that cannot be surmounted.

Germany has finally accepted the American view of ruthless submarine warfare. Berlin has plainly come to see that whatever temporary military advantage may have been gained from it has been lost a thousandfold in the moral revulsion of all civilized peoples which followed this slaughter of the innocents. Having frankly and fully disavowed the sinking of the Arabic, the way is now clear for the Imperial Government to comply with the earlier demand of the President by "disavowing the wanton act of its naval Commander in sinking the Lusitania" and by "offering reparation for American lives lost, so far as reparation can be made for a needless destruction of human life by an illegal act."

Since the submarine policy of von Tirpitz was announced in February, President Wilson has been a better friend and a wiser counsellor of the German Government than its own military autocracy has been. By patiently, earnestly and firmly undertaking to bring the Imperial [illegible] to their senses, he has shown a higher regard for Germany's reputation [illegible] of civilization than Germany's rulers [illegible]. If he has finally restored the German Government to [illegible] and sanity and brought it to appreciate the vital importance of that "decent respect to the opinions of mankind" which [illegible] he definitely distinguished his service to the German people [illegible] than his service to the American people.

The war [illegible] whatever the outcome may be. [illegible] with rage and obsessed by [illegible] that the truest friend the [illegible] was the President of the United States who forced a war-mad autocracy to respect both the law of nations and the law of humanity.—New York World.

Explorers just returned to Boston say that the ruins of an ancient civilization have been discovered in Honduras. Plenty of similar ruins can now be found in Belgium and France, too.

To the credit of France, be it noted, she is the only nation now at war that has not issued a series of frantic appeals for divine aid and claimed that God is exclusively on her side.

It is said that 100 New York families now own one-sixth of the city's real estate. That's nothing: the whole island was once owned by one Dutchman who paid only $24 for it.

A boy and girl who married the other day at Atlantic City said they did so to patch up a quarrel. We admire game people, but are glad it is his quarrel and not ours.

Some bright paragrapher has arisen to remark that if the allies capture Lens they will have their first look-in. And what they will see will look good to them.

The Wise Guy says: some men would as soon see their wives go to jail as to take a vacation.

RILEY'S BIRTHDAY

NOTABLE BIRTHDAYS TODAY
October 8

James Renwick McKinnie, of Colorado Springs, who promoted and developed the beet sugar industry of the United States, is 69 years old today. He was a pioneer in the gold fields of Colorado, and acquired many valuable mining properties. Still another activity in which he has been engaged is the draining of the Everglades in Florida. Mr. McKinnie was born in Harrison County, Ohio, Oct. 8, 1846. He migrated westward in boyhood with his parents, and was educated in the country schools. He served during the last two years of the Civil war in an Iowa regiment. After teaching school for four years, he pushed farther west, and made a gold strike in Colorado. His present holdings include gold, copper and lead properties in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California and Nevada. He promoted several large irrigation projects before he became interested in the [illegible] project of draining the Everglades.

Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the U. S. Steel Corporation, 69 years old today.

Hon. Coleman L. Blease, former Governor of South Carolina, 47 years old today.

Louis A. Coolidge, former assistant secretary of the Treasury, 57 years old today.

Dr. Mary E. Pennington, noted Philadelphia research chemist, 43 years old today.

Quiet With The Police

Thursday night was an unusually orderly night with the police considering the fact that it was the night after the biggest day of the fair. There were no arrests for fighting. Of course there were a few who, not satisfied with the pleasures of the big fair, indulged rather too freely with the result that they were lodged in the city prison for intoxication. Eleven arrests were made on this charge.

First Number of Course Is Appreciated

The Kaltenborn quartet, the initial number on the Peoples' lecture course, was in many respects the highest class musical entertainment ever offered in this city.

The quartet is composed of violinists of unusual ability and while none of the numbers on last night's program was of a popular character, there was genuine appreciation of practically every rendition.

Miss Elsie Baker, the beautiful woman besides being the possessor of perhaps the richest contralto voice ever heard in the city.

Especial mention should be made of the work of Miss Blanche Barbot, the pianiste, to whose skill is due much of the success of the organization.

STRIKE BIG WELL

The Consolidated Gas company struck a big gas well at West Lafayette during the forepart of the week. Its capacity is estimated at 500,000 cubic feet. Three other wells are to be drilled in at once.

COUNTY FAIR

first awards on singles, first on display of trays, and a number of firsts on corn.

The complete list of awards will not be known until after the fair closes today and the judges have tallied up their records. These will then have to be filed with the secretary and arranged in order.

Thursday's program, consisting of four good races, was given before one of the largest crowds ever seen at the local track. Ideal weather put the track in excellent condition and the grand stand, new addition and all, was literally jammed. The number of automobiles parked inside the track was estimated conservatively at 800.

It was another day for the winning of races in straight heats, the four races requiring only thirteen heats. The seventeen pace was the only event which went for more than the necessary three heats. Despite the fact that winners were consistent, the events were all interesting and in practically every race a majority of the entries stood a chance to win the money.

No Accidents

Not a single accident marred the program although there were some heats when the sulkies were dangerously bunched. Excellent order was preserved about the track which was practically clear at all times despite the immence throng about the fences.

Jack Woodcliff, B. M. Critchfield's blind horse, was the sensation of the day winning the eighteen trot in three straight heats. In the second heat of this event, he went to the wire on a break and Starter Roe let them go. However, he recovered his feet splendidly and upon passing third quarter pole was crowding Lady Maud S., Jamison's entry, winning out on the stretch. The Jamison entry took second money by finishing fourth in the first heat, and second in the two final heats. Axtell McGregor, the Ringleader entry, took third money by finishing second third and fourth in respective heats. Prince A. took fourth money.

Local Horse In Money

Much interest was taken in the second event by local people on account of the fact that George Markley's Don horse was entered. And the Coshocton horse was in the money, finishing fourth. In the first heat of this event, Anna Dillard, another Ringleader entry, went around in 16 1-4 winning and the local horse finished a good second. Purcell's entry, Colonel B., won the next three straight heats and first money. Anna Dillard took second money and Barney Light, the S. W. Hard way entry, took third money.

Cambridge Horse Wins

A Cambridge horse, Ira C., entered by Walters, took the third event, the two-twenty trot, in three straight heats. There were eight entries in this event and finishes in the second and third heats were exciting. There was some competition for second money, Sealise, the Clark McCoy entry, taking the cash by finishing fourth fourth and second in the three heats. King William took third money and Catherine Vincent took fourth money.

In Straight Heats

It was nothing but Al Wilkes in the ten pace the Banks entry leading the procession at practically every point along the route. The Creamer entry, Joe Ashland, finished second in the three heats while Vashti, Jamison's entry, took third money with two thirds and a fourth. Fourth money went to Joe Boggs, Benadum's gelding, who looked like a sure winner when he went to the wire the first time.

Today's races will undoubtedly pack the stands as the best events of the week are anticipated.

Peculiarities of Bats.

The bat ranks among animals, not birds. It is a mammal. A delicate membrane stretches from limb to limb on both sides of the body and incloses the greatly elongated digits. This membrane extends in some cases beyond the hinder limbs so as to include the tail. Its whole structure is perfectly adapted to sustained flight and unsuited for progression on the ground. Bats have small eyes, but their other organs of sense are so highly developed that even when blind they can fly in perfect safety, avoiding obstacles with seeming ease.

A STORY OF FACT

By RUTH GRAHAM

"Don't leave the porch, children Mamma won't be gone long."

These words were spoken by a mother to her two children—a boy and a girl aged respectively seven and four years—and the story which follows is true.

The adage "Truth is stranger than fiction" arises from the fact that in the latter the author must introduce a certain plausibility or he will be accused of a lack of the inventive faculty. Such incidents as this one are seldom taken for motifs for stories because they are too improbable.

The mother had not been gone long before a man came along, threw a sack over the girl's head and ran away with her. When the mother returned she found her daughter gone and her boy crying.

The neighborhood was searched high and low, the police were notified, and a posse was organized to hunt for the missing child. Weeks, months, years passed, but the little girl remained unheard of by her parents. Her mother never saw her again

Evelyn—such was the child's name—was carried to unknown parts by the man who kidnaped her, but why he had taken her must remain a mystery, for she was too young to understand his object. After a time he gave her to a family who treated her well, but she was finally taken to a wild region in Kansas and sold to persons there. They kept a tavern beside a road along which travelers passed at intervals, though in such a country guests were few and far between.

One night a traveler stopped at the house, ate his supper and was shown to his room. That night Evelyn was awakened by shrieks which grew fainter and fainter, as if coming from some one who was being overpowered. The terror stricken child lay awake the rest of the night. In the morning she was told that the travelers had gone on. After that for awhile the family purse seemed to have been replenished.

Evelyn by this time was old enough to know what was going on about her and gradually came to realize that she was living in a den of robbers and murderers. It was not always necessary to kill their victims, but when it was they did not hesitate to do so.

One day the child was standing at the door crying. Three woodchoppers came along and asked her what was her trouble. She gave them her confidence, telling them how she had been taken from her home and had finally fallen into hands of those whose deeds made her shudder. They took her away with them, and on the information she had given a posse was organized, and the lair of the murderers was raided. Some of them escaped, but others were captured, tried and convicted.

This sounds for all the world like a fairy story of a little girl who was held by an ogre and just before she was about to be eaten up was rescued by a woodchopper.

After this Evelyn was claimed by a woman who said she was her mother. Evelyn denied this, but, since she had no home, went to live with the woman. But she remained here only a year, at the end of which time the woman drove her out to shift for herself.

The poor child was now twelve years old and devoted herself to making her own living. But all the while she never gave up hope that she would find her parents and her brother. The brother meanwhile was growing to be a man. He remembered his lost sister and would have made efforts to find her if he could have got any clew. Unless a child is kidnaped for ransom and the parents are called upon to pay it there is little hope of its restoration No child of four years of age is capable of acting in its own behalf.

Evelyn, when she came to a marriageable age, was courted and became a wife. This was the end of her troubles, for she lived happily with her husband.

Forty years passed. Evelyn was now a woman over forty four. The brother from whom she was snatched was nearly fifty. One day he took up a newspaper and there, in a brief item, read his sister's story. Recognizing it as such, he at once wrote her.

Evelyn immediately made preparations to go to the brother from whom she had been separated so many years. The parents had been long dead, and this made her only the more eager to join him.

One day a cab was driven up to the house to which Evelyn had journeyed Her brother was expecting her, but was inside the house when she arrived Before she entered he heard her speak to the cabman.

"Mother's voice," he said. "It must be Evelyn."

Who can depict the feelings of this brother and sister, who when torn apart were little children, now united on their approach to old age? Their case was not that of a brother and a sister separated by an ordinary cause. The brother had known the agony of his mother at the loss of her child, while the sister had suffered untold horrors, all the while knowing that there were those who would protect and cherish her if they could but find her.

The most interesting feature of the story is that after more than four decades of separation the brother should have recognized his sister not by her own voice, but by its similarity to her mother's. Surely we live again in our children.

Princess Margaret of Denmark 20 years old, who has been in England for more than a year as the guest of her aunt, Queen Alexandra, is, according to court gossip, to become the bride of the Prince of Wales at the close of the war.

During the latter years of George III's reign all performances of Shakespeare's "King Lear" were forbidden, in consequence of the madness of the king.

A New York lawyer reported that his safe had been robbed, and when asked what the loot was, said his nightshirt, a comb and a brush.

True Secret of Keeping Youthful Looking

(The Beauty Seeker.)

"The real secret of keeping young-looking and beautiful," says a well-known hygienist, "is to keep the liver and bowels normally active. Without these requisites, poisonous waste products remain in the system, polluting the blood and lodging in various organs, tissues, joints. One becomes flabby, obese, nervous, mentally sluggish, dull-eyed, wrinkled and sallow of face.

"But to get liver and bowels working as they ought, without producing evil after-effects, has been the problem. Fortunately, there is a prescription of unquestioned merit, which may now be had in convenient tablet form. Its value is due largely to an ingredient derived from the humble May apple, or its root, which has been called 'vegetable calomel' because of its effectiveness—though of course it is not to be classed with the real calomel of mercurial origin. There is no habit-forming constituent in 'sentanel' tablets—that's the name—and their use is not followed by weakness or exhaustion. On the contrary, these harmless vegetable tablets tend to impart tone and elasticity to the relaxed intestinal wall. Sentanel tablets, which may be procured from any druggist—a dime's worth will do—will prove a revelation to any constipated, liver-troubled person."

Chief Cause of Pimples, Blotches, Sallow Skin

(Messenger of Health.)

Unsightly eruptions, pimples, boils, blotches, sallow or muddy skin, usually are due to a sluggish liver, a constipated bowel—and a polluted blood stream as a consequence. How foolish in such cases to resort to outward applications, which can never have natural, permanent results. If more people only knew it, there is a very simple remedy, to be found in any drug store which is as effective as it is harmless and quick acting. It is an old formula, long recognized by the medical profession, which has been put in tablet form, and at such small cost no one need now be deprived of its wonderful benefits.

"Sentanel tablets"—that's the name—are entirely vegetable and there's no habit-forming ingredient. You need only get about a dime's worth, and swallow one at bedtime to realize there's nothing else quite so good for the purpose. The action in the morning is so easy, so soothing, and instead of a weakening after-effect, you feel truly refreshed and invigorated. Sentanel tablets are not only the finest remedy known for constipation and torpid liver, but offer the sanest, most sensible treatment for complexion difficulties of the character mentioned.

Great Demand for New Constipation Remedy

They say that the advent of the "sentanel tablet" as a vegetable substitute for calomel has resulted in an extraordinary demand for this remarkable product. It seems to have made a hit particularly with those afflicted with chronic constipation, who were quick to recognize its advantages over calomel and the usual laxatives.

Sentanel tablets, aside from their efficacy, doubtless owe their success largely to a tendency to aid in bringing about natural functioning—instead of encouraging the "cathartic habit." Also, instead of injuring the membranous lining of the organs involved, they exert a healing influence. Instead of weakening, they add tone to the intestinal wall. And they work so easily and gently, they are of course preferred [illegible] to the violently acting purgatives. Their inexpensiveness is another reason for the popularity of sentanel tablets. One need procure only a dime's worth, and take one tablet [illegible] convinced that the ideal remedy for constipation, torpid liver, and their many evil consequences, has finally been found.—Druggists Review

THE BATTLE-CRY

By CHARLES NEVILLE BUCK

AUTHOR of "The CALL of the CUMBERLANDS"

CHAPTER I.

The leaves of poplar and oak hung still and limp; no ghost of breeze found its way down there to stir them into movement or whisper. Banks of rhododendron, breaking into a foam of bloom, gave the seeming of green and white capped waves arrested and solidified by some sudden paralysis of nature. Sound itself appeared dead, save for hushed minors that only accentuated the stillness of the Cumberland forest.

Now, as evening sent her warning with gathering shadows that began to lurk in the valleys, two mounted figures made no sound either, save when a hoof splashed on a slippery surface or saddle-leather creaked under the patient scrambling of their animals.

In front rode a battered mountaineer astride a rusty, brown mule.

The second figure came some yards behind, carefully following in the other's wake on a mule which limped. This second mule bore a woman, riding astride. She was a young woman, and if just now her slender shoulders also drooped a little, still even in their droop they hinted at a gallant grace of carriage.

The girl was very slender and, though convoyed by the drab missionary, "Good Anse" Talbott, riding astride a lame mount and accoutered with saddlebags and blanket-roll, her clothes were not of mountain calico, but of good fabric, skillfully tailored, and she carried her head erect.

Indubitably this was a "furriner;" a woman from the other world of "down below." But who was she, and why had she come? As to that, word had gone ahead of her and been duly reported to the one man who knew things hereabout; who made it a point to know things, and whose name stood as a challenge to innovation in the mountains.

When at morning she had started out from the shack town at the end of the rails, "Bad Anse" Havey's informers had ridden not far behind her. Later they had pushed ahead and relayed their message to their chief.

She had often heard the name of Bad Anse Havey. The yellow press of the state, and even of the nation, was fond of using it. Whenever to the lawless mountains came a fresh upblazing of feudal hatred and blood was let, it was customary to say that the affair bore the earmarks of Bad Anse's incitement. Certain it was that in his own territory this man was overlord and dictator.

Like one of the untamable eagles that circled the windy crests of his mountains, he had watched with eyes that could gaze unblinking into the sun all men who came and went through the highlands where his aerie perched. Those whom he hated, unless they, too, were of the eagle breed, fierce and resourceful and strong of talon, could not remain there.

This slender young woman, astride a mule, was coming as the avowed outrider of a new order. She meant to make war on the whole fabric of illiteracy and squalid ignorance which lay intrenched here. Consequently her arrival would interest Bad Anse Havey.

Once, when they had stopped by a wayside mill to let their mules [illegible] at the water trough, she had caught a scrap of conversation that was not meant for her ears, as [illegible] tossed from bearded lip to bearded lip among the hickory-shirted loafers at the mill door.

"Reckon thet thar's the [illegible] woman what aims ter start a [illegible] over on the head of Tribulation," drawled one native. "I heard tell of her t'other day."

With a somewhat derisive laugh another half [illegible]: "Mebby she hain't talked ther project over with Bad Anse yit. Hit mought be a right good idee fer thet gal ter go on back down below whar she b'longs at."

The girl was thinking of all this now as she rode in the wake of her silent escort.

In a moment of almost cringing despair she wished indeed that she were "back thar down below whar she b'longed at."

Then, almost fiercely, drawing back her aching shoulders, she cast her eyes about on the darkening scene and raised her voice in anxious inquiry: "How much farther do we have to go?"

The man riding ahead did not turn his face, but flung his answer apathetically backward over his shoulder: "We got to keep right on till we comes ter a dwellin'-house. I'm aimin' fer old man Fletch McNash's cabin a leetle ther rise of a mile from hyar. I 'low mebby he mought shelter us till mornin'."

"And if he doesn't?"

"Ef he doesn't, we've got ter ride on a spell further."

The girl closed her eyes for a moment and pressed her lip between her teeth.

At last a sudden turn in the road brought to view a wretched patch of bare clay, circled by a dilapidated paling fence, within which gloomed a squalid and unlighted cabin of logs. At sight of its desolation the girl's heart sank. A square hovel, windowless and obviously of one room, held up a wretched lean-to that sagged drunkenly against its end. The open door was merely a patch of greater darkness in the gray picture. Behind it loomed the mountain like a crouching Colossus.

At first she thought it an abandoned shack, but as they drew near the stile a dark object lazily rose, resolving itself into a small boy of perhaps eleven. He had been sitting hunched up there at gaze with his hands clasped around his thin knees.

As he came to his feet he revealed a thin stature swallowed up in a hickory shirt and an overample pair of butternut trousers that had evidently come down in honorable heritage from elder brethren. His small face wore a sharp, prematurely old expression as he stood staring up at the new arrivals and hitching at the single "gallus" which supported the family breeches.

"Airy one o' ye folks got a chaw o' terbaccy?" he demanded tersely, then added in plaintive afternote: "I hain't had a chaw terday."

"Sonny," announced the colorless mountaineer with equal succinctness, "we want ter be took in. We're benighted."

"Ye mought ax Fletch," was the stolid reply, "only he hain't hyar. Hes airy one o' ye folks got a chaw o' terbaccy."

"I don't chaw, ner drink, ner smoke," answered the horseman gravely, in the manner of one who teaches by precept. "I'm a preacher of ther Gawspel. Air ye Fletch's boy?"

"Huh-huh. Hain't thet woman got no terbaccy nuther?"

Evidently, whatever other characteristics went into this youth's nature, he was admirably gifted with tenacity and singleness of purpose.

Over Her Stood the Woman Who Had Been Across the Stile.

Juanita Holland smiled as she shook her head and replied: "I'm a woman, and I don't use tobacco."

"The hell ye don't!" The boy pondered, then added scornfully. "My mammy chaws and smokes, too—but she don't straddle no hoss."

After that administration of rebuke he deigned once more to recognize the missionary's insistent queries, though he did so with a laconic impatience.

"I tell ye Fletch hain't hyar." The boy started disgustedly away, but paused in passing to jerk his head toward the house and added: "Ye mought ax thet woman ef ye've a mind ter."

The travelers raised their eyes and saw a second figure standing with hands on hips staring at them from the distance. It was the slovenly figure of a woman, clad in a colorless and shapeless skirt and an equally shapeless jacket, which hung unbelted about her thick waist. As she came slowly forward the girl began to take in other details. The woman was barefooted and walked with a shambling gait which made Juanita think of bears pacing their barred inclosures in a zoo. Her face was hard and unsmiling, and the wrinkles about her eyes were those of anxious and lean years, but the eyes themselves were not unkind. Her lips were tight clamped on the stem of a clay pipe.

"Evenin', ma'am," began the mountaineer. "I'm Good Anse Talbott. I reckon mebby ye've heerd of me. This lady is Miss Holland from down below. I 'lowed Fletch mought let us tarry hyar till sunup."

"I reckon he mought ef he war hyar—though we don't foller taking in strangers," was the dubious reply. "—but he ain't hyar."

"Where air he at?"

"Don't know. Didn't ye see him down the road as ye rid along?"

"Wall, now—" drawled the missionary. "I hain't skeercely as well acquainted hyarabouts as further up Tribulation. What manner o' lookin' man air he?"

"He don't look like nothin' much," replied his wife morosely. "He's jest an ornery-lookin' old man."

"Whither did he sot out ter go when he left hyar?"

The woman shook her head, then a grim flash of latent wrath broke in her eyes.

"I'll jest let ye hev the truth, stranger. Some triflin' fellers done sa'ntered past hyar with a jug of licker, an' thet fool Fletch hes jest done follered 'em off. Thet's all thar is to hit, an' he hain't got no license ter ack thetaway nuther. I reckon by now he's a-layin' drunk somewhars."

For a moment there was silence, through which drifted the distant tinkle of cowbells down the creek. Beyond the crests lingered only a lemon afterglow as relict of the dead day. The brown, colorless man astride his mule sat stupidly looking down at the brown, colorless woman across the stile. The waiting girl heard the preacher inquiring which way the master of the house had gone and surmising that "mebby he'd better set out in search of him," the words seemed to come from a great distance, and her head swam giddily. Then, overcome with disgust and weariness, Juanita Holland saw the afterglow turn slowly to pale gray and then to black, shot through with orange spots. Then she grew suddenly indifferent to the situation, swayed in her saddle, and slipped limply to the ground.

The young woman who had come to conquer the mountains and carry a torch of enlightenment to their illiteracy had fainted from discouragement and weariness at the end of the first day's march.

The weariness which caused the fainting spell must have lengthened its duration, for when Juanita's lashes flickered upward again and her brain came gropingly back to consciousness she was no longer by the stile.

She was lying in the smothering softness of a feather bed. On her palate and tongue lingered an unfamiliar, sweetish taste, while through her veins she felt the coursing of a warm glow.

Over her stood the woman who had been across the stile when she fainted, her attitude anxiously watchful. In one hand she held a stone jug, and in the other a gourd dipper. So that accounted for the taste and the glow, and as Juanita took in the circumstance she heard the high, nasal voice, pitched none the less in a tone of kindly reassurance.

"Ye'll be spry as a squirrel in a leetle spell, honey. Don't fret yoreself none. Ye war jest plumb tuckered out an' ye swooned. I've been a rubbin' your hands an' a-pourin' a little white licker down yore throat. Don't worrit yoreself none. We're pore folks an' we hain't got much, but I reckon we kin make out ter enjoy ye somehow."

The four walls of the cabin might have been the rocky confines of a mountain cavern, so [illegible] did they merge into the impalpable and sooty murk that hung between them, obliterating all remoter outline. Only things in a narrow circle grew visible and at the center of this lighted area was the slender figure of a girl holding up a lard taper, its radius of light yellow and flickering.

As the mountain girl felt the eyes of the strange and, to her, wonderful woman from the great, unknown world on her, her own dark lashes fell timidly and the hand that held the taper trembled, while into her cheeks crept a carmine self-consciousness. Juanita, for her part, sensed in her veins a new and subtler glow than that which the moonshine whisky had quickened. The men and women of the hills had made her heartsick with their stolid and animallike coarseness. Now she saw a slender figure in which the lines were yet transitory between the straightness of the child and the budding curves of womanhood.

It was to such children of the hills as this that Juanita Holland was to bring the new teachings. But even as she smiled the child—for she seemed to be only fifteen or sixteen—surrendered to her shyness and, thrusting the taper into her mother's hand, shrank out of sight in some shadowed corner of the place.

Then Juanita's eyes occupied themselves with what fragmentary details the faint light revealed. The barrel of a rifle caught the weak flare and glittered. The uncarpeted floor of rude puncheon slabs lay a thing of gaping cracks, and overhead there was a vague feeling of low rafters, from which hung strings of ancient and shriveled peppers and a few crinkled "hands" of "natural leaf."

"Dawn," commanded the woman, "take yore foot in your hand an' light out ter ther barn an' see ef ye kin find some aigs."

As Juanita watched the door she caught a glimpse of a slight figure that vanished with the same quick noiselessness with which a beaver slips into the water.

"I reckon ye kin jest lay thar a spell," added the woman, "whilst I goes out an' sees what victuals I kin skeer up."

Left alone, the girl from Philadelphia ran over the events of the day—events which seemed to smother her under a weight of squalor and foreboding.

At length from the road came loud shouts of drunken laughter, broken by the evident remonstrances of a companion who sought to enjoin quiet, and by these tokens the "furrin" woman knew that the lord of the squalid manor was returning, and that he was coming under convoy. She shrank from a meeting with Fletch McNash; but if she went out by the only door she knew she would have to confront him, so she lay still.

Fletch was deposited in one of the split-bottom chairs by the doorstep.

"I jest went over thar ter borry a hoe," he proclaimed, "an' I met up with some fellers and thar was all manner of free licker. They had white licker an' bottled-in-bond licker, an' none of hit didn't cost nothin'. Them fellers jest wouldn't hardly suffer me ter come away."

"An' whilst ye war a-soakin' up thet thar free licker them pertater sets was a-dryin' up waitin' ter be sot out," came the stern, wifely reminder.

Between the strident voices came every now and then the softly modulated tones of the stranger whose words Juanita lost. Yet, somehow, whenever she heard them she felt soothed, and after each of these utterances the woman outside also spoke in softer tones.

Whoever the stranger was, he carried in his voice a reassuring quality, so that without having seen him the girl felt that in his presence there was an element of strength and safeguarding.

At last from one of the beds she heard a stirring sound, and a moment later a childish form opened a door at the back of the cabin and slipped out into the darkness.

That revealed an avenue of escape. Juanita had not known that these windowless cabins are usually supplied with two doors, and that the one into which the wind does not drive the weather stands open for light on wintry days. Now she, too, rose noiselessly and went out of the close and musty room. It was quite dark out there and she could feel, rather than see, the densely foliaged side of the mountain that loomed upward at the back.

In her brooding she lost account of time. At last she heard a voice sing from the stile:

"I'm Jim White, an' I'm a-comin' in."

A thick welcome from Fletch McNash followed, and then again silence settled.

After a while, as she sat there on the rock, with her chin disconsolately in her hand and her elbows on her knees, Juanita became conscious of footsteps and knew that someone was coming toward her. Then she caught the calm voice which had already impressed her—the voice of the stranger who had brought home the half-helpless householder.

"I reckon we're out of earshot now. I reckon we kin hev speech here; but heed your voice an' talk low."

In the face of such a preface the girl shrank back in fresh panic. She had no wish to overhear private conversations.

She huddled back against the rock and cast an anxious glance about her for a way to escape. Behind lay the mountain wall with its junglelike growth, where her feet would sound an alarm of rustling branches and disturbed deadwood. But the men were strolling near her, and to try to reach the house would require crossing their path.

Then the second shadow spoke, and its voice carried beside the nasal shrillness so common to the hills the tenseness of suppressed excitement.

"Thar's liable ter be hell ternight."

The girl thought that the quiet stranger laughed, though of that she could not be certain.

"I reckon ye mean concernin' Cal Douglas?"

"Thet's hit: when I rid outen Peril this afternoon ther jury hed done took ther case, an' everybody 'lowed they'd find a verdict afore sundown."

"I reckon"—the taller of the two men answered slowly, and into his softly modulated voice crept something of flinty finality—"I reckon I can tell ye what that verdict's goin' to be. Cal will come clear."

"Thet hain't ther pint," urged the messenger excitedly. "Thet hain't why I've rid over hyar like a bat outen hell ter cotch up with ye. I was aimin' ter fotch word over ter ther dance, but es I come by hyar I seen yore hoss hitched out thar in ther road, so I lit an' come in. I reckon ye knows thet cote an' thet jury. Thet's yore business, but thet hain't all."

"Well, what's the balance of it? Talk out. What are ye aimin' to tell me?"

"I met up with a feller in Job [illegible] blind tiger jest outside Peril. He'd drunk a lot of licker an' he got ter talking mighty loose-tongued an' [illegible]"

The girl sickened a little as she felt that her fears were being realized, and one hand went involuntarily up to her breast and stayed there. The young man with the shrill voice talked on impetuously.

The flag of the United Kingdom, commonly known as the [illegible], is the official flag of the whole empire, though of course the various provinces have their flaglets, just as some States of the American Union have theirs while Old Glory flies over all.

Texas has 753,000 mules.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.
